includes a powerful macro recorder that makes recording an action very easy. An action consists of an object that is on the screen and a keystroke, typically a mouse click. With ScreenShots(1) you can easily record actions of any kind, such as: Recording mouse clicks. recording a screenshot recording an action from an application. recording a screen saver. recording a video recording. You can even create short video recordings from within the application that are looped in ScreenShots(1). Unlike other screen savers, ScreenShots(1) can record not only keystrokes but also mouse clicks. You can record the mouse click for any object that is displayed on the screen. By clicking in a different place on the screen, you can later repeat the action. ScreenShots(1) has a very powerful macro recorder. You can record any action on the screen. Once the action is recorded, you can play back the action with a keystroke or mouse click. The action can be repeated any number of times with a single keystroke or mouse click. When a keystroke is recorded, the keystroke is identified by its Unicode character, so you can also save an action as a sequence of keystrokes. The easy-to-use interface makes setting up a macro recording very simple. You can use any mouse button or keystroke to record a macro. A combination of modifier keys can be recorded. You can also choose to record a macro only for a specific window, or for the entire screen. The macro recorder can be used for recording individual actions or entire scripts. Macros can be shared with other users or projects. The exported projects are compact (zip archive) files. Projects can be shared with other users or projects via email or the internet. Macro presets are available, that are pre-programmed with predefined actions. You can preview your macros in an instant. A simple click is enough to show the actions. The recorded actions are stored in a project. After you have recorded an action, you can run the project. This will replay the recorded action. The recorded actions can be exported as a script, which can be shared with other users or projects 81e310abbf
